INTRODUCTION

Corruption to society from a long history since side by side came Corruption The origin , perhaps , goes back to ancient traditions. To those who take control of the state and society gifts to give It is not for nothing that ancient religions are mentioned with contempt.

Corruption in law of the person career position abuse to do , to give a bribe , to receive a bribe , career powers abuse to do , to give bribes in commerce or Naf get in order to own career from his position society and state interests opposite respectively another to the law the opposite respectively use is understood <sup>1</sup>.

While analyzing the corruption occurring in the modern society as a phenomenon that threatens and negatively affects the society, we can clearly see that different scholars have approached this concept in different ways, and corruption itself has different manifestations in different communities. Including corruption, embezzlement or embezzlement committed by abuse of official authority , fraud by using official position, abuse of power or official authority for selfish purposes, deviating from the scope of authority or official authority, inaction of authority, official We can see it in the crimes of forgery, as well as taking bribes, giving bribes, brokering bribes and money laundering, and other similar illegal activities.

Correct assessment of the corruption situation is one of the main requirements for preventing corruption. Knowing the level of corruption at a certain point helps to correctly and effectively implement the following:

- Effective implementation of legal norms issued by the state;
- Timely "treatment" of corruption-affected points;
- Achieving the positive goal envisaged in the management of society;
- Ensuring a prosperous lifestyle of the community;
- Strengthening the role of the public in management;
- Constantly correctly analyzing corruption and truthfully assessing the situation;
- Establishing a transparent and sincere attitude in establishing international cooperation.

Despite the fact that corruption is often compared to a hydra, there are very effective ways to fight this phenomenon, as world practice has successfully proven. Failure to fight corruption means supporting it, and considering the devastating consequences of such inaction on all aspects of society, the challenge of fighting this "enemy within" is a challenge for any country. Therefore, it is very important to study the causes of corruption - after all, it is necessary to fight not only the weed itself, but also its seeds. By understanding what corruption is, by studying the phenomenon and the experience of other countries in combating it, we gain knowledge - and knowledge, as we know, is power. The main thing is that this power can be used in its place - it requires not only political will, but also the support of the whole society. Otherwise, the fight against corruption will be lost <sup>3</sup>.

It should be understood that corruption cannot be eliminated with only one legal norm. Criminal-legal measures can only end some corruption-related crimes. First of all, it is necessary to instill in citizens a feeling of unwillingness to participate in relations related to corruption.

Thus, prevention of modern society from corruption - places the following demands on state bodies and institutions of civil society:

Firstly, prevention of corruption, finding the roots of corruption in time and "drying the roots"; Secondly, to identify actions related to corruption, to eliminate them, to fight against corruption;

Thirdly, to carry out regular reforms in public life to prevent and fight against corruption.
