INTRODUCTION

We hear the word character in our colloquial speech quite often. This is especially common if there is a description of a person or his actions.

Translated from the ancient Greek language, character is a distinctive feature. And indeed, each person is individual in his inner state. There are people with similar character traits, but each person has an individual character. In the world you will not meet people with the same characters.

THE MAIN FINDINGS AND RESULTS

Character is a set of psychological properties of a person that determine his behavior in a particular situation. All people have character. There are no spineless people. When we describe the actions of a certain person, we refer to such words as a character trait. A character trait is a certain feature of a person, they can be both positive and negative. These are the personal qualities of a person: kindness, courage, responsibility, determination, perseverance, reliability, honesty, they help a person achieve success in life. There are also such qualities that impede his path to success, such as cruelty, hypocrisy, deceit, rudeness, inconstancy.

Character is laid in a person from the first days of his life. It is influenced by many different factors. One common factor is genetic predisposition.

No wonder they say about a child that he is similar in character to his father or grandfather. It means that similar character traits were inherited from father to son. The formation of character is influenced by the society surrounding the child.

This is his family, close people, teachers, friends, their attitude and actions towards him. Parents have a great influence on the formation of the character of their child. They, as a rule, must see and control the personal qualities of their child. They can and should influence the development of character, they should help the child to develop his positive aspects. In my opinion, this is the most important criterion.

Scientists have proven that character is formed before the age of 10, and therefore parents should contribute to this work. It is necessary that there are more positive qualities in the character of the child, so he will quickly achieve his success in life, be an exemplary family man, and bring positive into society.

From the course of social science it is known that each person has individual features that only he has. However, despite this fact, people have the same features. These are the traits of a person's character. This feature of the human personality is influenced by many factors. The fact is that the character is formed and changed in the process of life, it is daily influenced by various factors. These include: living conditions, environment, the rules of the society with which the person is in contact, and much more. In addition, genetics affects the character of a person, it is worth paying attention to the character of your parents and older relatives, as you can see similarities in behavior.

It is very important in what conditions the child grows and with what children and people he communicates. It is no coincidence that caring parents carefully review the social circle of their child. All this is done in order to protect the little person from negative information, which in the future will spoil his character. The fact is that bad communities can very quickly spoil an individual, he still does not have a strong core and he cannot distinguish good from bad. And those who are older know how to veil and deceive. How to present something bad in a good light. It is no coincidence that parents so often face rebellion and misunderstanding from their children. And this is not only a process of growing up, but also a bad influence. If the parent has not won or lost his own authority in the eyes of the child, then he will begin to look for him elsewhere. When he finds another authoritative person, he will be able to manage him and direct him wherever he wants.

To avoid such problems, children need to be given enough attention from childhood. That is, give him time, be interested in his affairs, allow him to express his feelings, educate him correctly, explain how to behave correctly. It is very important that a solid core is formed in the individual, and he becomes a person capable of being responsible for his actions.

CONCLUSION

A person can be strong. This means that he knows perfectly well what he wants from this life. He will not let others dictate what he does. It is the leader, not the follower.

Another person may have a soft and infantile character. Rather, he was stuck somewhere in childhood and did not bring up the necessary qualities in him. He is a follower, he does what he is told. Even if it's not in his best interest. Cannot defend their own positions, unlike the first.
