ABSTRACT

This article describes what communication is like, its psychological and social structures, what types of content it is like, and how communication and speech styles go in social society. At the same time, it details how important communication is to a person's social life.

Keywords: the concept of "communication," complex types of communication: communicative communication, interactive communication, perceptive communication; social types of communication: official communication, publicity communication, and informal or interpersonal communication.

One of man's most influential and mature activities in the world is communication. The benefits of communication to people are enormous. Because he feels relieved by telling someone his inner feelings. And the motivation and comfort given through communication will help a person to take a bold step towards strength, enthusiasm and new plans, and new goals.

Communication is actually a complex process. Communication is divided into three types:

1. Communicative
2. Interactive
3. Perceptive

Communicative aspect of communication

Explaining the communication aspect of communication, it is understood that people exchange information, ideas, ideas, news, knowledge, and experiences with one another. In addition to words, people use a variety of movements, shortcomings, situations, laughter, tones, and so on (i.e. psychological influences). They intensify the communication process and complement it, and sometimes replace speech communication. Space locations of the speakers also play a major role in the Noverbal dialogue. For example, because women are rich in more emotions, they stand up and talk to each other as they talk, and there is always an extraordinary distance between men. And it should also be noted that according to information provided by our scientists, it is much more effective and useful for students to learn face-to-face than to sit back and forth in the classroom. (Matthew 24:14; 28:19, 20) Jehovah's Witnesses would be pleased to discuss these answers with you. The importance of communication plays a major role in explaining something to a group, or in the course process. Speaking at the same pace, without any emotion, will make everyone bored, and as a result of distractions, they will not be well aware of the data. If a voice is sometimes spoken in a loud, low tone, a variety of emotions, facial mimics, and hand movements are used, the lesson will be interesting, understandable, and memorable for everyone.

Interactive aspect of communication

(Galatians 5:22, 23) Jehovah's Witnesses would be pleased to discuss these answers with you. Therefore, people can demonstrate a number of abilities, such as working in cooperation, helping each other, learning from one another, and achieving movement harmony. Therefore, the teacher may influence the child's personality for the purpose. In fact, any communication, if it does not consist of nonsense, purposeless, dry statements, is able to constantly change the behavior of those who engage in communication, their skills.

When the interactive aspect is explained, people's ability to interact with each other during their work together. (Matthew 24:14; 28:19, 20) Jehovah's Witnesses would be pleased to discuss these conclusions. This will make people jealous, encourage them to work in cooperation, and achieve harmony of movements with understanding each other. On the interactive side, the main objective is to achieve something through the effect and this effect. On a public scale, one can see that the behavior of people in different conditions, the management of their behavior, depends on certain psychological laws. The reason for this is the various norms and regulations adopted in society. Because in the processes of interaction and interaction, images of such behavior are embedded in people's minds that everyone accepts them as the norm. There are many examples of this. Examples include greetings to respect adults, not laughing hard in public places, not speaking harshly, placing a place on the bus bigger than it is, and so on. (Matthew 24:14; 28:19, 20) Jehovah's Witnesses would be pleased to discuss these laws or other laws in your country.

Perceptive aspect of communication

This will be related to the process of understanding, understanding and understanding people in the process of communication. (Matthew 24:14; 28:19, 20) Jehovah's Witnesses would be pleased to discuss these processes. And during the conversation, he tries to get him to understand what he is like from his activists. The perceptive side is useful to a person because it is effective whether it is in self-awareness or in understanding others. For example, he gives the right advice by understanding and understanding someone who is talking about his problem or feelings. (Matthew 24:14; 28:19, 20) Jehovah's Witnesses would be pleased to discuss these answers with you.

The concept of communication should be distinguished from communication. Communication refers to the exchange of information between systems of living and dead nature. The exchange of signals between animals, man's communication with technical means is all communication. Communication, on the other hand, can only be done between humans. A human child becomes an individual in the process of communicating and interacting with others, acquiring social experience and culture. Communication is the first type of social activity to appear in ontogenesis (a path to individual development). Communication is closely related to activities. The aforementioned communication is actively used by a person by communicative, interactive and perceptive. For example, if an unknown person is encountered, he will first respect himself or ask about his work and other things, and if it is communicative, on the other hand, he will be impressed by the success and achievements of his life, and his work together through this effect will be an interactive aspect if he is working together on new plans. Understanding each other and understanding what they feel about the situation and knowing what their main goal is, it will be the perceptive aspect. (Matthew 24:14; 28:19, 20) Therefore, in one case, all three aspects of communication are used in their place in a chain.

Social types of communication

As a socio-psychological event, communication is involved in all aspects of social life and arises as a need for material, spiritual, cultural, emotional, and motivational aspects of cooperation. Satisfying all kinds of human needs in a reasonable manner depends on the margin of communication, and interpersonal relations serve to decide the ideas of a perfect generation and a perfect person. The essence of communication success is the manifestation and development of qualities, qualities, such as the spiritual world, motivation for his needs, character traits, individual-typological characteristics, abilities, beliefs.

The methodological types of communication also vary depending on different situations in social life. For example, a person must engage in official-style communication where official law applies. What will be the official dialogue? Official communication is carried out by legal entities in government or non-governmental organizations, official meetings, assemblies, and assemblies. The manner of speaking in the official dialogue should also be official. It is impossible to communicate in the family circle, on the street and between friends.

Publicity communication is the delivery of messages and tablets to biscuits in the form of journalists, broadcasters and bloggers in the form of publicity communication in the media and social networks. A person who engages in publicity in a publicity style should have the same standard in facial structure, mimicry, and external structure. He should not notice the emotional state of the facial and external body parts, the movements he makes, and the situation in his gestures.

Mutual or informal communication is a form of informal communication that occurs with a person's close associates, acquaintances, friends, family members, and calligraphy at work in society, on the streets, at work, in reading, etc. In this style of communication, an individual can show his or her emotional state with all his actions, speak freely.

In a nutshell, communication play a major role and importance in all human life. When a person is alive, he does not stop moving or doing certain activities. This is because as they grow older, the need for it begins to arise. (Matthew 24:14; 28:19, 20) It is true that communication is at the heart of activity, success, and discoveries. The reason for this is that a person shares, understands, and acts together or individually. Without communication, nothing can be achieved, for only what a person speaks cannot be called communication, and mimics, signs, and hand movements are all part of communication. Communication is also justified in the fact that mankind will come to such a situation. (Matthew 24:14; 28:19, 20) Jehovah's Witnesses would be pleased to discuss these answers with you. The surrounding environment is where communication will certainly affect people each other. Each person's own "I" is formed in the process of communicating with those around him. A person's ways of life develop in an awal family, garden, school, institute, workshop, among the elderly, that is, in groups and communities. When our need for communication is not satisfied, our minds will not develop either. We are satisfied with the communication we have with someone, and in some cases we feel unsatisfied. There will be communication with himself, for example, how he lived in this life, and he will be self-controlled with such questions as what he is satisfied with, what mistakes he has made, what he has achieved, what he has achieved, and what he has dreamed of. This is certainly good, and as he tries to find answers to such questions, he will make fundamental changes in his life. (Matthew 24:14; 28:19, 20) Jehovah's Witnesses would be pleased to discuss these answers with you. Communication is an integral part of human life and the content of human life. Man should never stop exchanging thoughts with one another, working on ideas and goals. Since man has been given such an opportunity, we should all make the most of it and make our lives more meaningful.
