ABSTRACT

Psycholinguistics is one of the fields that are now being studied, and this direction is of special importance in human social life. In the formation of various communities among people, their psycholinguistic features are of primary importance. In this regard, several studies are being carried out in the field of psycholinguistics.

Keywords: psycholinguistics, slang, speech activity, youth psychology.

INTRODUCTION

The field that studies the process of speech formation and perception in direct connection with language, and thus allows us to understand the human psyche, is psycholinguistics. Psycholinguistics, having developed a model of human speech activity, examines it using various experimental methods. This direction, which emerged in the 60s of the last century, does not have a specific research method or direction today. Nevertheless, in practice it is of great importance in studying the speech and psyche of people of different ages, professions and social environments.

Language is understood as the main means of communication and interaction in society. Therefore, it is necessary to study and analyze language in all its aspects. The use of language and its elements in a person's socio-political views is important. In this case, the meanings created with the help of language elements create meaning with the help of language signs, which at the same time allow us to understand concepts inherent in human behavior.

The speaker's psychic world is reflected in his speech. That is why people with different personalities unite with each other through speech, or vice versa. In this regard, the style of language and the language units used in speech, in particular slang, play a great role. It is no coincidence that in this era of artificial intelligence development, online communities and supporters are increasing. Understanding each other through language has also become popular on social networks, and psycholinguistically harmonious communities are spontaneously emerging there. Slang, which is widely used in youth speech, is taking on a new meaning every day. Words such as "rofl", "kringe", "vibe", "abyuzar", which are spread under the term "youth slang", are also uniting several young people around them. It can be observed that such words are often found in the speech of bloggers and viners.

Russian linguist and psychologist V.P. Belyarin has six different views on the text:

1. Behind speech there is a language system and psychology.
2. Behind different texts there is a different psychology.
3. The structure of the literary text corresponds to the accented structure of consciousness.
4. The dominant emotional content is the methodological basis for the semantic, morphological, and syntactic properties of the literary text.
5. The text consists of reality + consciousness + worldview + language + text creator + recipient = text projection.

6. The recipient has his own interpretation of the work of art.

Accordingly, just as each speaker and his receiver have their own mental balance, so too do terms such as “stukach”-caller, “pahan”-harip, “sirkach”-mock, “vozdukh”-stipend, “dakhshat”-extremely, “sindiriding”-you did it admirably, “gisht”-ugly, “ukhlatdi”-aldadi, “risovka kilmoq”-to show off have their own speakers.

Leonard Bloomfield considers two main theories of human behavior, which include speech activity.

1. According to the mentalistic theory, the diversity of human behavior is associated with the intervention of some non-physiological factor - the soul, will or consciousness - that exists in any person, but does not obey the laws of the material world. Therefore, we cannot predict the behavior of other people.

2. According to the mechanistic theory, the diversity of human behavior, including speech, is due solely to the fact that the human body is a complex system.

Based on similar theories, a person's character and character traits can be understood from his speech, and everyone can create speech intimacy with people who match his psychological aura.
