

DISTINCTIVE ASPECTS OF PUBLIC SAFETY IN ENSURING STATE SECURITY

Rakhmanov Abror Khakimjon ugli

The Academy of Armed Forces of the Republic of Uzbekistan
Training of the Ministry of Internal Affairs Troops Department

ABSTRACT

State security is one of the main pillars of every country. It is ensured not only through the armed forces and internal security agencies, but also through public security systems. Public security, in turn, is a set of measures aimed at protecting citizens, maintaining public order and increasing public confidence. This article considers specific aspects of public security in ensuring state security.

Keywords: public places, citizens, protection, maintenance of order, internal security, social stability.

INTRODUCTION

Public safety systems play an important role in protecting citizens. They implement all necessary measures to prevent crime, maintain public order and ensure the safety of citizens. Public security agencies, such as the police, emergency services and other organizations, are in direct contact with citizens and actively participate in ensuring their safety. They work in partnership with the community to reduce crime, increase safety and promote social stability. Public safety as a part of national security is important in ensuring social stability. Social stability, in turn, is closely related to economic development, political stability and social justice. Public safety systems are actively involved in solving social problems, such as poverty, education and health. This increases confidence among citizens and helps strengthen state security. Public safety increases the importance of information exchange and communication systems in ensuring state security.[7]

With the help of modern technologies and means of communication, public security bodies have the opportunity to communicate with citizens quickly and efficiently. It plays an important role in crime prevention, emergency response and public awareness. Through information sharing, public safety agencies are able to warn citizens of dangers, take safety precautions, and encourage active public participation. Public safety is important in the implementation of programs aimed at increasing the involvement and participation of citizens in the provision of state security. Citizens should participate in the operation of public security systems, be active in ensuring their own security and increase social responsibility in the community. This will help strengthen public safety and ensure state security.[1]

Public safety plays an important role in the development of international cooperation in ensuring state security. Global problems such as terrorism, transnational crime and environmental threats require international cooperation of public security systems. By sharing information, pooling expertise and resources among nations, public safety systems can become more effective in combating global threats. Public safety is important in ensuring social justice and equality in ensuring national security. Public safety systems must actively participate in ensuring social justice among citizens, preventing discrimination. This increases confidence among citizens and helps strengthen state security. Public safety is important in the application of innovative approaches to solving social problems in the provision of state security. Modern technologies, such as artificial intelligence, big data and other innovative solutions help to improve the efficiency of public security systems. This creates new opportunities for crime prevention, security and protection of citizens. Public safety is important in the consideration of social and cultural aspects in the provision of national security. Every society has its own culture, traditions and social structure. Public security systems must take these aspects into account and effectively communicate with citizens and meet their needs. This will help strengthen public safety and ensure state security. Public safety plays an important role in increasing the importance of education and training in ensuring national security. Providing citizens with security-related knowledge, encouraging them to take security measures, and developing a culture of security in the public is one of the main tasks of public security systems. This will help ensure safety among citizens. Public safety plays an important role in increasing the importance of social networks and mass media in ensuring national security. Mass media and social media are important in informing the public, taking safety precautions and encouraging citizens to actively participate. This will help strengthen public safety and ensure state security. Citizens play a number of important roles in public safety systems. Their participation is important in ensuring public safety and maintaining social stability. Citizens play an important role in ensuring safety by working cooperatively with public safety agencies. They can be actively involved in providing information to the police and other security agencies, helping to prevent crime and maintaining public order. Citizens participate in developing a culture of safety in their communities. They help improve public safety by taking safety precautions, learning safety rules and sharing them with others. Citizens play an important role in emergency preparedness and response. They can participate in developing safety plans in their communities, learning evacuation procedures, and learning how to act in an emergency. Citizens play an important role in public safety through public oversight. They help improve public safety in their communities by monitoring crime, identifying suspicious activity and reporting to security agencies. Citizens can be informed and express their opinions about public safety through mass media and social networks. Through this, they actively participate in forming public opinion on security issues and taking security measures. Citizens participate in public safety through a sense of social responsibility. They should be active in solving social problems, crime prevention and security in their communities.[2]

Citizens participate in improving public safety through safety education and educating others. They help promote public safety by learning safety rules, participating in safety events, and providing safety knowledge to others. Citizens play an important role in ensuring public safety by participating in community activities. They are actively involved in ensuring security at public events, developing public relations and maintaining social stability. In general, citizens play an important role in improving public safety by actively participating in public safety systems, taking responsibility for their own safety, and working collaboratively with the public. Their participation helps to strengthen public safety and ensure national security.[5]

Social stability has a number of important implications for national security. Social stability basically means that the social, economic and political relations within a society are in a balanced and peaceful state. Below are the main aspects that show the impact of social stability on national security. Social stability helps maintain peace within the state. In a peaceful environment, the crime rate will decrease, which will increase the security of the state. Social unrest, protests or clashes can threaten security. A stable social environment increases trust among citizens. Citizens will be willing to cooperate, which is essential to public safety. Social trust helps strengthen state security, as citizens become more willing to help security agencies. Social stability also affects economic stability. Economic growth and stability increase state security, as economic problems (e.g. unemployment, poverty) can lead to social unrest. A sustainable economy encourages citizens to solve social problems. Social stability is closely related to political stability. The stability of the political system ensures social harmony among citizens. Political instability, on the other hand, can lead to social unrest and threaten national security. Social sustainability encourages the active participation of civil society. Citizens can know their rights and obligations, be active in public affairs and participate in ensuring state security. This will help strengthen state security. Social stability helps to solve social problems. In a society with social justice, equality and opportunities, the level of discontent among citizens will decrease, which will increase the security of the state. Social stability increases trust in security agencies. Citizens are willing to help security agencies and support their activities. This increases the efficiency of security agencies. Social stability ensures cultural unity. When there is harmony and mutual respect between different ethnic and cultural groups, social unrest is reduced and national security is strengthened. In general, social stability has a positive effect on national security. Sustainable societies are effective in providing security, reducing crime and solving social problems. Therefore, countries should pay special attention to maintaining and developing social stability.[3]

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, specific aspects of public safety are important in ensuring state security. Public security systems protect citizens, ensure social stability, develop information exchange and communication systems, attract citizens, develop international cooperation, ensure social justice and equality, apply innovative approaches, take into account social and cultural aspects, It plays an important role in ensuring the security of the state by increasing the importance of education and training and increasing the importance of social networks and mass media. These aspects help to strengthen public safety and ensure national security.

REFERENCES

1. Abdullayev, A. (2022). "Public Safety and State Security: Theoretical and Practical Aspects." Tashkent: Publications of the Ministry of Internal Affairs of the Republic of Uzbekistan.
2. Tashpolatov, B. (2021). "Citizen Participation and Public Safety." Samarkand: Publication of Samarkand State University.
3. Saidov, D. (2023). "Public safety and social problems." Bukhara: Publication of Bukhara State University.
4. Kadyrov, E. (2020). "Public Event Security: Challenges and Solutions." Tashkent: Publication of the National University of Uzbekistan.

5. Kholmatov, F. (2022). "Public safety and psychological safety." Tashkent: Publication of the Psychological Society of Uzbekistan.
6. Rakhmanov, G. (2021). "Maintaining public order and preventing crime." Andijan: Andijan State University Publication.
7. Yusupov, H. (2023). "State Security and Public Safety: The Interdependence." Karshi: Karshi State University Publication.